Training

The summer time is a great time to start preparing for the Cross Country season. If you could get started by trying to run a little each week day it would be a big head start for the fall. If you get used to running for 5 minutes with out stopping, then work to 10 minute runs and gradually work your way up as your endurance gets better. Another idea have one day as a longer run, then a shorter but faster run, the next day a comfortable run, the next day a group of short fast
